Fergus Edwards finds the philosopher to be an unexpected influence on the playwright

some of our Contributors

Brian Collins

is an associate professor and Chair of Philosophy at California Lutheran University. He is also the Founder and Director of the SoCal Philosophy Academy, an organization dedicated to promoting dialogue and critical thinking through pre-college philosophy instruction and public philosophy.

Maryna Lazareva

is an associate professor and Head of the Department of Humanitarian Education at Lviv National Environmental University, in Ukraine. Her main interests are in social philosophy, existentialism, environmentalism, futurology, and transhumanism.

Fergus Edwards

is a PhD candidate in English at the University of Tasmania. He used to be an investment banker, working in Hong Kong, London, New York and Singapore. Now he spends his spare time running, and once completed the 247km from Athens to Sparta in 35 hours. It was, he claims, enjoyable.

Rose Thompson

is a writer, contributor for menswear magazine Boys by Girls, occasional poet and third year philosophy student. All of her written works – spanning subjects on art, sociopolitics, the human impulse, LGBT and current affairs – feature an underlying philosophical thread: “Whence evil?” she likes to enquire, over a Dionysian pint.
